IULMA Dictionaries Collection

Dear colleague:

The Instituto Interuniversitario de Lenguas Modernas Aplicadas (IULMA) of which, the Universidad de Alicante, the Universitat de València and the Universitat Jaume I-Castellón are members, is launching a new collection of Dictionaries in ebook format, published by the University of Valencia (<http://puv.uv.es/>). We are therefore pleased to invite researchers in Applied Linguistics to submit their proposals. Here are the details you need to know:

This collection promotes research that includes one or more of these features:

- Approaches which are highly innovative either at a micro or macro structural level.
- Lexical materials which are poorly represented in conventional dictionaries.
- Works on languages underrepresented in current lexicographic field, as long as they have a link with the working languages at IULMA.

Some possible examples of work in lexicography that could be published within our collection are:

- Bilingual dictionaries of minor languages.
- Specialised dictionaries for disciplines with low diffusion.
- Dictionaries of specific lexical categories: phrases, verbal types, particles, acronyms, abbreviations, affixes, geonyms, etc.
- Dictionaries of collocations.
- Dictionaries of restricted registers, either contextual or social.
- Highly innovative dictionary samples.
- Frequency-based dictionaries.

Dictionaries can be either bilingual or monolingual. Any language can be the object of these works, although the presentation languages will have to be: English, Spanish, Catalan, French, German, or Italian.

One dictionary will be published per year, although the Scientific Committee reserves the right to propose more publications if there is evidence of high scientific quality.

Proposals will be subject to strict arrival order before being evaluated, although they can be submitted any time during the year. The Editorial Board will meet every September to evaluate them and the scheduled time for publication will be November.

It is strongly recommended that only 25% of authors of collective works belong to IULMA. In the case of individual works, at least three out of four publications must come from authors unrelated to IULMA.

The format will be exclusively digital (ebook) and the Servicio de Publicaciones de la Universitat de València (PUV) will be in charge of its publication and diffusion.

We look forward to receiving your proposals.

Sincerely,

Professor Cesáreo Calvo Rigual
